

University of Colorado
Department of Mathematics
Problem of the Month
October 2021

Fifteen pirates own a treasure chest. What is the least number of locks they can put on the chest so that there is a way to distribute keys to the locks to the fifteen pirates so that no minority subgroup can open all the locks, but every majority subgroup can open all the locks? Prove that your answer is correct.